

Julie Saby, PGY1, Family Medicine (Moose Jaw)

Julie originally comes from Alberta and spent every other weekend hiking some sort of mountain while attending med school at the U of A. She ended up in Moose Jaw because she wanted longitudinal learning, to work with preceptors that deeply care about her growth as a physician, and to have a tight-knit group of residents. When she's not laughing with her mentors in clinic, or not busy delivering babies, she can be found in the outdoors trail running at Buffalo Pound, singing in the community choir, or baking some treats to share at work.

Here are some of the reasons Julie was chosen as Resident of the Month (As quoted from the nomination letter):

"In a time of resident program administrator transition, she has volunteered to serve as liaison for incoming medical students in terms of information, electives, and providing a welcoming space, greatly assisting with students accessing the information they need and facilitating a positive learning environment and welcoming space for them. She also consistently builds positive relationships with these students and is a fantastic ambassador for the program and the city in general."

"Even though Julie is from Sylvan Lake, Alberta, and did her medical training at the U of A, she has plugged in to Moose Jaw as a community wholeheartedly, recently joining the Moose Jaw community choir."

"Simply put, the residency program here wouldn't have near the vibrancy without her. Her tireless kindhearted service is an inspiration and encouragement to both her fellow residents and attending physicians who have the privilege of working with her."
